Sixth JEA Outreach Academy - Philadelphia

November 7 and 8, 2007

A pre-convention activity of the Journalism Education Association

*Philadelphia is more than just the hub of American History
– it's a hub of multicultural resources for high school journalism.*

Resource ('rE-"sors) -- a source of supply, support, or aid, especially one that can be readily drawn upon when needed.

Conference bookstore offers wide selection

A plethora of resources awaits you at the Journalism Education Association's Outreach Academy November 7 for Philadelphia area teachers and November 8 for teachers from farther away.

A JEA initiative to promote both diversity and membership growth, the Academy is a free two-day, intensive pre-convention seminar

Journalists and teachers gather in a session for publications advisers who have five years or fewer advising experience and/or teach in schools traditionally underrepresented in JEA membership, especially low-income, urban and rural schools.

The program includes discussion of teaching journalism to highly diverse populations, effective instructional techniques, resources for teachers in and out of the classroom, and organizations ready to help advisers.

Limited to 30 participants, the Outreach Academy runs from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuition is free with breakfast and lunch provided. Participation in the program includes free registration to the Philadelphia Convention November 8 through 11.

With a new emphasis in this initiative, priority for admission will be given to advisers from the host city and surrounding urban areas. Special consideration will be given to advisers who are new to JEA in schools with economically disadvantaged students, advisers of color, and advisers with fewer than five years advising experience.

As an added bonus, outreach participants are eligible for $150 scholarships to other journalism workshops.
